      While working on my personal introduction, the design principle I found the most useful was the principle of repetition. I say so due to how repetition allows for the whole presentation to round itself out in being united through the consistent use of the same color palette, fonts and graphic style for elements. Here, I did find it difficult in Canva to align my elements and graphics to the certain places I want it to be in. This is due to my elements occasionally misaligning automatically and difficulty in the layers of my elements. With all of this, I was able to learn that in visual communication, it is not easy to create a presentation that flows smoothly while being appealing to the eye and understandable. With this, I was truly able to learn the importance of the principles of presentation design.
